

EISENHOWER, DWIGHT D.: Papers as President
LEGISLATIVE MEETINGS SERIES

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Legislative Meetings Series spans the period from December 29, 1952 to August 23, 1960 and is arranged chronologically. Each of the original folders covered meetings for an entire year. A staff archivist has broken these down into folders which usually contain meetings for two or three-month periods. The original arrangement has otherwise been retained. The meetings are listed individually on the container list, beneath each folder title. The discussion topics are enclosed in brackets. This series consists of an estimated 1,600 pages of manuscripts.

The types of records documenting discussions at legislative leaders conferences vary from brief outlines of items discussed and agreements reached to extensively-detailed summaries of discussions. These comprehensive summaries, usually labeled "Notes on Legislative Leadership Meetings," were kept for all Republican leaders meetings held during the years 1959 and 1960 and for bipartisan meetings convened periodically throughout the Administration. There are also a few full summaries of Republican leaders meetings held prior to 1959, particularly for meetings called at the end of each calendar year to plan overall programs for the coming year.

Most of the records of Republican legislative leaders meetings for the years 1953-58 consist of two types of documents: memoranda or aides memoire, and "Supplementary Notes." The memoranda, prepared by Arthur Minnich, were sent to the Budget Director after each meeting in order to inform him of major items discussed and to advise him of agreements reached or decisions made. These memoranda neither indicate the process by which agreements were reached nor contain references to opinions or attitudes held by meeting participants.

The Supplementary Notes also cover the first six years of the Eisenhower Administration and were also prepared by Minnich. They were intended to record information not included in the memoranda. These notes document discussions of unusual interest or color. They range in length from brief one or two-paragraph anecdotes (or even humorous remarks or quips) to two or three-page discussions of issues. The notes focus primarily on the President and his relationship with the Congressional leaders. Many frank observations on foreign as well as domestic issues are recorded in these documents. The Supplementary Notes did not usually record highly technical presentations and were not prepared after every meeting.

Other types of documents which appear in this series include agendas which were usually prepared by Sherman Adams or Wilton Persons, analyses of legislation on specific matters, and press releases.

President Eisenhower viewed the legislative leaders meeting as a channel for communicating with Congress and for consolidating Republican Congressional support for Administration legislative proposals. Attending these meetings regularly were the Republican minority leaders and whips in both houses, and sometimes ranking Republican members of key committees in the Senate and House. During the 83rd Congress, when the Republican party was the majority party in Congress, Speaker of the House Joseph Martin, Senate Majority Leader Robert Taft--and subsequently William Knowland--Senate President Pro-Tempore Styles Bridges, and selected committee chairmen also attended these sessions. The Executive Branch was usually represented by the President, Vice President, members of the White House staff and officials from various Executive departments. The legislative leaders were frequently briefed by the Secretary of State or other Cabinet officers on policy matters. In turn, the Congressional leaders discussed with the President and his advisers strategy for securing Congressional approval of key Administration measures.

Periodically the President held joint meetings of Congressional leaders from both the Democratic and Republican parties. These bipartisan meetings were usually devoted primarily to foreign policy and defense matters. The bipartisan legislative leaders usually received briefings from Secretary of State Dulles, and sometimes from the Secretary of Defense and representatives of other agencies involved in conducting national security policy. Like the Republican Congressional leaders meetings, these bipartisan sessions were opened to questions and discussion. The Administration often convened these bipartisan gatherings at the time of major conferences or international crises. Thus, the Geneva Conference of 1954, the Geneva Summit meeting of 1955, the Suez Canal crisis, and the continuing tensions in the Middle East were all subjects of special briefings at these meetings.

The Republican leaders conferences covered a wide variety of subjects. Any legislation of particular concern to the Eisenhower Administration was almost certainly discussed in one or more of these meetings. A few of the more frequently discussed topics include the Budget, appropriations measures, school construction, social security and health insurance, proposed minimum wages, labor reform legislation, agricultural programs, civil rights, public works, postal pay and rates, inflation, and politics. While the meetings focused primarily on domestic matters, foreign policy issues were sometimes discussed. For example, mutual security and foreign trade were discussed extensively in these meetings.

Additional materials pertaining to the President's relations with Congressional leaders can be found in the Dwight D. Eisenhower Diaries Series of Eisenhower's Papers as President of the United States.

An index to the Legislative Leaders meeting minutes is located in the L. Arthur Minnich series of the Records of the White House Office of the Staff Secretary (boxes 17-29).

The original hand-written minutes of Legislative Leaders Meetings (taken by L. Arthur Minnich) are located in the Legislative Meetings Series of the Records of the White House Office of the Staff Secretary (boxes 1-6).
